EXPERT DECLARATION OF CHARIS KUBRIN

CHARIS KUBRIN declares pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1746:

1. I am a Professor of Criminology, Law & Society, and (by courtesy) Sociology at the University of California, Irvine. I am also a member of the Council on Criminal Justice, the Racial Democracy, Crime and Justice Network, the Diversity Scholars Network, the Scholars Strategy Network, the UC Consortium on Social Science and Law, and UCI's Center for Population, Inequality, and Policy. Finally, I am an expert for the Crime and Justice Research Alliance. I have attached my Curriculum Vitae as Exhibit A to this Declaration.

2. I hereby submit the following opinion in support of Intervenor Defendants in Texas v. Department of Homeland Security, filed in the Eastern District of Texas, Tyler Division, on August 23, 2024. I base my opinion on a review of the materials cited and on my education and experience in the field of criminology and law & society. A complete summary of my opinions and materials relied upon are included herein. I reserve the right to amend this declaration.

Assignment

3. I have been engaged by counsel for the Intervenor in this case to evaluate certain assertions made by the Plaintiff States in Texas v. Department of Homeland Security, filed in the Eastern District of Texas, Tyler Division, on August 23, 2024. The lawsuit challenges a new humanitarian parole process, announced in June 2024 and implemented in August 2024, which allows certain non-citizen spouses and stepchildren of U.S. citizens—who must qualify and meet certain requirements—to apply to be considered on a case-by-case basis for parole for a period of up to three years. See, e.g., Implementation of Keeping Families Together, 89 Fed. Reg. 67459 (Jan. 9, 2023). To complete my assignment, I have relied on the research detailed below and in the attached Exhibit B. I also have reviewed Plaintiff States’ pleadings, including the Complaint, ECF. No. 1; the Plaintiff States’ Motion for Temporary Restraining Order, Preliminary Injunction, and Stay of Agency Action, ECF. No. 3; and Plaintiff States’ Motion for Summary Judgement, ECF No. 78. I have agreed to receive payment in the amount of $1,500 total to compensate for my expert analysis.

Summary of Opinions

4. Plaintiffs’ claims about increased crime and incarceration-related costs due to immigration are incorrect and do not reflect what the overwhelming majority of studies on this topic find, both with respect to immigrant criminality and the immigration-crime nexus. Increases in immigration do not lead to a corresponding increase in crime or incarceration rates, and immigrants are generally less likely to be involved in crime compared to nonimmigrants. This is true for immigrants as a whole as well as undocumented immigrants specifically, and for locales all over the United States including Texas.

Qualifications

5. I am a nationally known criminologist with over twenty-five years of experience. I have conducted substantial research about immigrant criminality and the immigration-crime nexus. I have authored or co-authored two books and more than 26 articles on this specific topic, including in leading peer-reviewed journals such as Social Problems, Journal of Research in Crime and Delinquency, Journal of Quantitative Criminology, British Journal of Criminology, and Annual Review of Criminology, as well as scholarly reports published by diverse organizations including the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering and Medicine and the Council on Criminal Justice. I served as the Co-Editor of a journal special issue dedicated to the topic of immigration and crime for the journal Migration Letters. I have provided analyses and advice on this topic to various state governments and non-governmental organizations. I have received extensive grant funding from the National Institute of Justice and the National Science Foundation to conduct research on immigration and crime. Finally, I have given dozens of academic talks as well as dozens of public talks on my research in this area (see my CV).

6. More broadly I have expertise in race, ethnicity, and crime and in quantitative data analysis. I have conducted quantitative analyses for most of my career, and the vast majority of my published research involves quantitative analysis. I have authored or co-authored 6 books, more than 55 papers in peer-reviewed journals, more than 23 chapters in edited volumes, and dozens of other reports, most of which include quantitative analyses. I have received several national awards including the Ruth Shonle Cavan Young Scholar Award from the American Society of Criminology (for outstanding scholarly contributions to the discipline of criminology); the Herbert Bloch Award from the American Society of Criminology (for outstanding service contributions to the ASC and to the professional interests of criminology); the Coramae Richey Mann Award from the Division on People of Color and Crime, the American Society of Criminology (for outstanding contributions of scholarship on race/ethnicity, crime, and justice); the W.E.B. DuBois Award from the Western Society of Criminology (for significant contributions to racial and ethnic issues in the field of criminology); and the Paul Tappan Award from the Western Society of Criminology (for outstanding contributions to the field of criminology). In 2019, I was named a Fellow of the American Society of Criminology.

7. I received my M.A. in Sociology from the University of Washington in 1995 and my PhD. in Sociology from the University of Washington in 2000. Prior to becoming a faculty member at the University of California, Irvine, I was a faculty member in the Sociology Department at George Washington University (from 2000-2011).

Materials Relied Upon

8. I have attached as Exhibit B the list of materials on which I relied to form my opinion.

Plaintiff States' Claims Regarding Costs Associated with Increased Crime Are Incorrect

9. In their Complaint (filed Aug. 23, 2024), the Plaintiff States assert that Texas sustains harms because it “spends tens of millions of dollars each year for increased law enforcement as its citizens suffer increased crime...due to illegal immigration” (Dkt. No. 1, ¶ 84). Based on my expertise in this field, as well as decades of academic research studying this topic, the statement that “citizens suffer increased crime ... due to illegal immigration” is untrue and has been thoroughly disproven.

Immigrants Are Less Likely To Be Involved in Crime than Non-Immigrants

10. Concerning immigrant criminality, research on the question of whether immigrants are more likely to offend compared to their native-born counterparts has a substantial history that has consistently concluded that immigrants are less likely to be involved in crime compared to non-immigrants. Nearly ninety years ago, the Wickersham Commission wrote a report on “Crime and the Foreign-born” (National Commission on Law Observance and Enforcement 1931), which examined immigrants’ involvement in crime and their relationship with the criminal justice system. One notable conclusion is that involvement in crime was lower among immigrants than the native-born (National Commission on Law Observance and Enforcement 1931).

11. Almost a century later, contemporary research bolsters that conclusion. Studies reveal that immigrants have lower involvement than the native-born on an array of crime measures including overall offending (Butcher and Piehl 1998; McCann, Zhang, and Boateng 2022), violent crime (DiPietro and Bursik 2012; DiPietro and McGloin 2012; Jiang and Peterson 2012; Reingle, Jennings, and Maldonado-Molina 2011; Sampson, Morenoff and Raudenbush 2005; Vaughn and Salas-Wright 2018; Vaughn et al. 2014), property crime (Vaughn and Salas-Wright 2018; Vaughn et al. 2014), drinking and driving (Maldonado, Reingle, Jennings and Prado 2011) and school-rule violations and crime (Peguero 2011; Peguero and Jiang 2014; Peguero, Irizarry, King, Dunning-Lozano, Hong, and Bondy 2023).

12. Differences between immigrants and native-born individuals also appear in studies examining arrests, both self-reported and official, again revealing lower levels among the foreign-born relative to the native-born (Bersani and DiPietro 2016; Light, He and Robey 2020; Orrick, Guerra and Piquero 2021).

13. Longitudinal research finds differences in the trajectories, or life-course patterns, of offending for immigrants and non-immigrants. Relative to the native-born, the foreign-born are less likely to exhibit high-rate persistent patterns of offending (Bersani, Loughran and Piquero 2014). Additionally, desistance (i.e., the declining of criminality) occurs more quickly among immigrants as compared to non-immigrants as they transition to early adulthood (Bersani, Loughran and Piquero 2014).

14. This finding extends to studies that examine rates of institutionalization, including incarceration. Butcher and Piehl (2008) find that 18- to 40-year-old immigrant men were less likely than the native-born to be confined in correctional facilities, mental hospitals, or other institutions. Landgrave and Nowrasteh's (2018) analysis of national incarceration rates for individuals aged 18-54 finds that both documented and undocumented immigrants had lower incarceration rates than those who are U.S.-born. Most recently, constructing the first nationally representative long-run time series (1870–2020) of incarceration rates for immigrants and the U.S.-born, Abramaitzky et al. (2023) find that: 1) as a group, immigrants have had lower incarceration rates than the U.S.-born for 150 years, 2) relative to the U.S.-born, immigrants' incarceration rates have declined since 1960: immigrants today are 60% less likely to be incarcerated (30% relative to U.S.-born whites), and, 3) this relative decline occurred among immigrants from all regions of the world.

15. Specific to Texas, Orrick, Updegrove, Piquero and Kovandzic (2021) show that homicide incarceration rates in Texas during 2013-2015 were markedly higher for U.S.-born individuals than for foreign-born individuals, including those identified as unauthorized immigrants. In a follow-up study, Orrick, Guerra, and Piquero (2023) find that in analyses covering a large portion of the life course, U.S. citizens were always observed to have a higher level of offending—regardless of offense type—than immigrants in the non-Texas born offender sample.

Increased Immigration Does Not Increase Crime

16. Texas does not document a correlation between the number of immigrants in the state and the money that it expends incarcerating immigrants through the SCAAP program, nor does it claim to expend any money incarcerating the population eligible for KFT parole (who would not fall under the SCAAP program) in particular. Finally, it does not explain how altering the immigration status of individuals already present in the state of Texas would impact the number of individuals incarcerated in the state. It asserts only that “[t]he amounts of unreimbursed expenses [for incarceration] will likely increase if more illegal aliens are paroled under the PIP Program.” TRO at 47.

17. Research concerning the immigration-crime nexus confirms that increased immigration does not increase crime or incarceration rates. The rapid proliferation of research investigates whether higher or increasing immigration across metropolitan areas, counties, cities, census tracts, block groups, and neighborhood clusters affect crime levels. An essential takeaway from this literature is that higher or increased immigration does not lead to more crime and, if anything, can decrease crime (Kubrin and Ousey 2023). That is, the vast majority of findings from studies fail to document consistent, systematic evidence of a positive association between immigration and crime.

18. Rather, the most common result is that immigration and crime are not significantly related (Butcher and Piehl 1998; Emerick, Curry, Collins and Rodriguez 2014; Feldmeyer and Steffensmeier 2009; Graif and Sampson 2009; Kirk and Papachristos 2011; Kreager, Lyons and Hays 2011; Stansfield, Akins Rumbaut and Hammer 2013; Schnapp 2012; Schnapp 2015; Stucky 2003; for a detailed review of these studies, see Kubrin and Ousey 2023). Ousey and Kubrin's (2018) meta-analysis, or systematic quantitative review of the literature, indicated that more than 60 percent of the 543 immigration-crime findings in their data were not significant, indicating an overall null relationship between immigration and crime.

19. The next most common is a finding of a significant negative relationship between immigration and crime (MacDonald, Hipp and Gill 2013; Kubrin and Ishizawa 2012; Martinez, Lee and Stowell 2010; Martinez and Stowell 2012; Ousey and Kubrin 2009; Ousey and Kubrin 2014; Stowell, Messner, McGeever and Raffalovich 2009; for a detailed review of these studies, see Kubrin and Ousey 2023). According to Ousey and Kubrin (2018), statistically significant negative associations outnumbered significant positive associations by more than two-to-one in their data. Overall, their study reports an average immigration-crime association that is significant and negative (as immigration goes up, crime goes down) but of a very small magnitude.

20. Results from the most recent studies—published after those analyzed in Ousey and Kubrin (2018)—are consistent with these findings (Disha 2019; Green 2016; Harris, Mutimer and Thomas 2021; Kubrin, Hipp and Kim 2018; Kubrin, Luo and Hipp (2024); Light and Miller 2018; Light, Miller and Kelly 2017; Ramos, Hernandez and Shelfer (2023); Wolff, Intravia, Baglivio and Piquero 2018). Thus, research evidence to date reinforces a conclusion Lee and Martinez (2009) offered nearly 15 years ago: “Contrary to the predictions of classic criminological theories and popular stereotypes, immigration generally does not increase crime and often suppresses it” (p. 3).

Undocumented Immigration Does Not Increase Crime

21. I understand that the programs Texas challenges in this case concern people who have been or will be granted permission to be in the United States pursuant to parole, and thus will not be undocumented immigrants. However, even if Texas's conclusion with respect to undocumented immigration and crime is considered relevant to the subject matter at issue, this conclusion is also incorrect and unsupported by the research.

22. There is a smaller but growing body of research that examines undocumented immigration and crime, at both the individual and aggregate levels, that similarly concludes that undocumented immigration does not increase violence. As to the aggregate-level undocumented immigration-crime association, among the first major studies published are those by Michael Light and his colleagues (Light et al. 2017; Light and Miller 2018). Light et al. created a unique dataset that combines newly developed estimates of the unauthorized population (from two sources, the Center for Migration Studies and the Pew Research Center) with criminal, socio-economic, and demographic information from other sources. In a series of papers, Light and colleagues use these data to analyze how the presence of undocumented immigration is associated with different types of crime across 50 states (and Washington, D.C.) from 1990-2014. In the most cited of these papers, Light and Miller (2018) conduct the first longitudinal analysis of the macro-level relationship between undocumented immigration and violent crime. Findings reveal that undocumented immigration does not increase violence; rather, the relationship is negative or null, depending on the violent crime type. Light and Miller (2018) confirm these findings in robustness checks that address questions related to selective migration (i.e., whether the observed negative finding is biased by undocumented immigrants relocating to areas to avoid violence) and under-reporting (i.e., whether those who lack legal status may be hesitant to report violent victimizations to avoid detection from legal officials).

23. Notably, these results are consistent with those from an earlier cross-sectional study; also using state-level data, Green (2016:519) does “not find a relationship between immigrant population size by any measure and violent crime.” Light and Miller’s (2018) results are also consistent with research that analyzes the impact of unauthorized immigration on crime across U.S. metropolitan areas and finds that “as immigration—in this case, unauthorized immigration specifically—increases in metropolitan areas, crime decreases” (Adelman et al. 2020:18).

24. A related study by Light and colleagues examines the influence of undocumented immigration on various drug and alcohol problems including drug arrests, drug overdose fatalities, driving under the influence (DUI) arrests, and DUI deaths (Light et al. 2017). Light et al. (2017:9) find that increased undocumented immigration is significantly associated with reductions in drug arrests, drug overdose deaths, and DUI arrests, net of other factors (there is no significant relationship between increased undocumented immigration and DUI deaths). They conclude that their findings “...significantly undermine arguments that the public is at greater risk for DUI or drug problems as a result of undocumented immigration. If anything, we suggest the opposite” (pg. 1453). Similar findings are reported in micro-level studies, including in Texas (Light, He and Robey 2020) and Florida (Ramos and Wenger (2020). It is also clear that fewer arrests leads to fewer people incarcerated.

25. In sum, based on the collective research, including studies conducted in Texas specifically, immigrants, including undocumented immigrants, are disproportionately less likely to engage in crime compared to their native-born counterparts and increases in immigration are not associated with crime increases, resulting in a very low risk that citizens will “suffer increased crime...due to illegal immigration,” as feared by the Plaintiff States. Lower crime rates also lead to lower rates of incarceration. I am not aware of any reputable research that contradicts this broader conclusion.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.
